Unlike LucasArts' later titles, DroidWorks was not part of the SCUMM engine and does not use any SCUMM-based design features. Instead, DroidWorks is built using the General Utility Markup Language (GUIL) with its own GUI features. It is the last original LucasArts game to be released for DOS and Windows platforms and was only released for Windows. The game has been ported to the Sony PlayStation, Microsoft Windows, Macintosh, and the Game Boy Color. It was eventually released on the Wii Virtual Console in North America on December 11, 2009 and on September 1, 2009 in Europe. DroidWorks takes place in the future, where the Jedi Knights have conquered the galaxy, and several Jedi have become obsessed with finding the lost Jedi weapon the Lightsaber, while protecting themselves from the force of the others. This is a play in the style of The Muppet Show. The player is given an overview of the events that will take place by a holographic projector in the droid ship. During each episode, the player goes through a series of challenges, tasks, and puzzles in the various areas of the galaxy, ultimately gaining access to the "Control Room" and ending the game by killing the Jedi. The game was only released in the US. It was only released in Japan on the PlayStation 2. Plot The Jedi, masters of the Force, have conquered the galaxy. However, there are still places where the Jedi cannot go. In the game, a new class of clone trooper, the Droid series, is created. These Clone Troopers are obedient, but they are also much more expensive to produce. Jedi Master Kippin found the solution when he stumbled upon the Lightsaber. The Lightsaber is a lightsaber-like weapon, not dissimilar to the lightsaber, but made of a metal alloy with a hilt that resembles that of a computer mouse. It is the most powerful weapon known to the Jedi. The problem was that the lightsaber's hilt could not be used in battle as it did not align with the weapon's specifications. Kippin thus traveled across the galaxy, looking for someone who could help him. The first group that Kippin found was group "T" led by the rogue Jedi pirate (later named "Saw Gerrera"), but the group was destroyed before it could help Kippin. Afterward, the Jedi believed Kippin to have been killed. While returning to his house, Kippin and his droid, Z-82157476af
